I like the look of the building, appreciate the time the architect and developers put into responding to input from the community, and am particularly pleased with the deep affordability of the units, critical to maintaining the mix of residents essential to the character of Highland Park.
8/15/2019	Andrew	Shelburne		Support	Its great to finally see a mixed income co-op being built that is affordable to a wider range of incomes. Not only is this project affordable it also looks very handsome and uses great materials such as brick. On top of all this the project is energy positive, this building should be a model for all future development on city owned land. DND needs to do more marketing regarding what a co-op is and is not, there is a lot of misinformation about co-op's and affordable housing in general. Many people falsely believe a co-op is the same thing as a rental unit which it is not. The people in this units earn equity and almost no one knows this. Thanks DND for listening to what the neighborhood wants to see built on City Owned Land. Andrew Shelburne Highland Park Resident
